An Alumnus Turned Cop On Campus

Some students take University elections very seriously. A Deputy Commissioner of Police DCP of the Delhi Police found this out the hard way when on 24 September 1999 night, a night preceding the day for DUSU elections, he received a call from a student urging him to turn up in the morning to cast his vote at the Law Faculty (the DCP has recently acquired a LLB degree). The student provided him with his polling serial number and urged him to vote for certain candidates.

The DCP, taken aback, could only muster saying that though he will not be turning up to cast his vote, he (owing to his position) would ensure that the polling, as well as the counting, goes off peacefully.

True to his word, North-West DCP Mr Satyendra Garg IPS, stuck around till the last vote was counted at the Police Lines counting centre September 25, near the DU North Campus. All the candidates, the victorious and the vanquished, had returned home along with their supporters leaving the University safe and sound.

Thanks, Satyendra Old Boy!
