

Valedictory Ceremony of University of Delhi: A Historic Journey of Excellence and Nation-building

The Prime Minister of India, Shri Narendra Modi, graced the Valedictory Ceremony of the Centenary Celebrations of the University of Delhi with his august presence. The ceremony marked a momentous occasion in the history of the University, as it celebrated a glorious century of academic excellence and unwavering dedication to nation-building. The Prime Minister, accompanied by esteemed dignitaries, reached the University of Delhi via a Metro ride, showcasing his commitment to sustainable and eco-friendly modes of transportation. During his journey, he had the opportunity to interact with students, who eagerly shared their aspirations and dreams. The excitement and enthusiasm of the students were palpable, reflecting the vibrant energy that has been an intrinsic part of the University's journey.

Addressing the gathering at the Multipurpose Hall, the Prime Minister expressed his deep-rooted emotional connection with Delhi University, describing it as more than just a university—it is a movement. He congratulated every student, teacher, and individual associated with the University on the occasion of its Centenary Celebrations. Delving into the significance of education in India's prosperity, the Prime Minister highlighted that the rich education system of the country has been instrumental in shaping its progress. He emphasized the pivotal role of universities in nurturing a generation of talented youth who played a vital part in India's post-independence journey towards development. The Prime Minister underscored the importance of aligning individual and institutional achievements with the nation's progress, remarking that Delhi University's growth from a humble beginning with only three colleges to now more than 90 colleges is a testament to its dedication to fostering education and knowledge.

Drawing parallels between historical struggles and contemporary aspirations, the Prime Minister envisioned the third decade of the new century as a transformative phase that would further propel India's development journey. He lauded the growing recognition of Indian universities on the global stage, a reflection of the country's emerging soft power and the success story of its dynamic youth. Highlighting the ongoing technological revolution, the Prime Minister stressed the need for universities to adapt their educational policies to provide students with the skills and knowledge required to excel in the Industry 4.0 era. He praised the Indian youth for their entrepreneurial spirit, evident in the rising number of startups, patent filings, and innovations.

The Prime Minister also highlighted India's growing recognition in the international arena, with countries showing keen interest in India's history, culture, heritage, and its ability to deliver even in times of crisis. He called on Indian universities to prepare their mindset for this development and to strive to be among the top-ranking institutions worldwide. Throughout his address, the Prime Minister reiterated the significance of education as a powerful catalyst for progress, stressing that the responsibility of shaping the minds and hearts of the nation lies with its educational institutions. He expressed confidence that Delhi University, with its vision and mission, will continue to nurture future-ready generations who possess the temperament to face and overcome challenges.

In conclusion, the Valedictory Ceremony of the Centenary Celebrations of the University of Delhi celebrated not only academic excellence but also the spirit of nation-building that has been at the core of the University's existence for a century. The event served as a reminder of the University's illustrious past and a beacon of hope for an even brighter future, where the youth of India would continue to shine on the global stage, carrying the torch of Indian values and progress.

Education Minister, Shri Dharmendra Pradhan, and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Delhi, Shri Yogesh Singh, graced the occasion, adding further significance to the historic event.

As the University of Delhi enters its 101st year, it stands poised to continue its journey of excellence, making substantial contributions to nation-building, and fostering generations of talented individuals who will shape the destiny of India and the world.
